Although studying religion—and, in many cases, Christianity—was a required course of study at Mainly Hall, students were not given a great deal of attention. As a result, the Department of Religion failed to make significant contributions to the advancement of knowledge in this field. However, over the years, the Department has made progress in expanding its programs and faculty, and is now considered one of the leading departments in the country.

In 2013, the Department began discussing the possibility of starting a new Master’s degree program. This degree program would focus on the study of religion and its impact on society, and would be open to students from a variety of backgrounds. The program was designed to be flexible, allowing students to choose from a wide range of courses, and would be offered in both online and on-campus formats.

The Department has worked tirelessly to develop this new program, and we believe it will be a valuable addition to the academic offerings at Mainly Hall. We are excited to offer this program to students who are interested in pursuing a deeper understanding of religion and its role in our world.

We hope that you will consider joining us in this exciting new venture, and we look forward to welcoming you to the Department of Religion at Mainly Hall.
